

I was appalled to learn that the FCC was actually considering allowing television and radio stations to broadcast expletives and nudity on the public airwaves, even if brief or fleeting. The adage that first we tolerate, then we accept, then embrace things that are wrong or vulgar is true.

I oppose any changes to the current FCC indecency standards.

I care about children and know that they are likely to be watching or listening at the time that some of this proposed nudity or expletives will be broadcast. Relaxing the current policy will not serve the public interest, but the interest of the media only.

I strongly urge the FCC to reject all proposals that would allow for any broadcast of expletives and nudity. We have enough pollution to worry about without worrying about the pollution of the minds of our children on FCC-licensed stations.
